

Christmas With The Wright Family

Christmas was right around the corner, and the Wright family was in a flurry of activity. Mr. Wright had just returned from the store and left the gifts in the right corner of the living room. Mrs. Wright was busy baking cookies in the kitchen. She had left the cookie cutters on the left side of the counter, but soon realized she needed the right ones for her gingerbread men.

"Could you pass me the right cookie cutters?" she asked Mr. Wright, who was decorating the left side of the Christmas tree. He left his task and handed her the right ones.

As the day went on, Mr. Wright realized he had left the Christmas lights in the garage. He walked to the right side of the house, where the garage was, but soon remembered that the lights were actually on the left shelf inside. He grabbed the lights and returned to the living room, only to find that he had picked up the wrong box. He sighed, left the room again, and this time made sure he had the right box.

Mrs. Wright was now wrapping presents at the kitchen table. She had left her favorite wrapping paper on the left side of the pantry. After wrapping a few gifts, she noticed that the tape was running out. "I think we have more tape in the right drawer of the desk," she said aloud. Mr. Wright went to check and sure enough, he found the tape right where she had said.

Wright Jr. and Little Miss Wright were now busy making Christmas cards - they wanted to write one for each of their friends. They left their markers scattered all over the floor. "You two need to clean up and put the markers back in the right place," Mrs. Wright instructed. They quickly gathered the markers and placed them in the left drawer of their art supplies cabinet.

As evening approached, the Wright family decided to watch a Christmas movie. Mr. Wright left the remote on the right arm of the sofa, and Wright Jr. picked it up to choose a movie. They settled on a holiday classic and made some popcorn. Mrs. Wright left the popcorn bowl on the left side of the coffee table, and everyone grabbed a handful.

During the movie, Mr. Wright realized he had left his glasses in the bedroom. He walked down the hallway, turned left, and found his glasses right on the nightstand. He returned to the living room just in time to see the best part of the movie.

After the movie, it was time to hang the stockings. Mrs. Wright had left the stockings in a box by the fireplace. Mr. Wright took the right one and hung it on the left side of the mantel. They continued this pattern until all the stockings were hung just right.

Before bed, Little Miss Wright left a plate of cookies for Santa on the left side of the fireplace and a glass of milk on the right. "I hope Santa likes what we left for him," she said with a smile.

As the Wright family headed to bed, they felt the joy and warmth of the holiday season all around them. They knew that everything was just right and there was nothing left to do but to dream of Christmas morning.

And so, with everything in place, the Wright family wished each other a good night, knowing that their Christmas was set to be perfectly right.
