

Left & Right Poem

The Wright family Christmas was just beginning,
When Dad left his keys and they all started grinning.

Mrs. Wright hollered, "Who's ready for cheer?"

"We left all the gifts piled right over here!"

Young Tommy Wright grabbed his coat from the floor,

"I'm right here, Mom, ready to explore!"

Sally Wright followed, with a look of delight,

"Did I leave my mittens on the left or the right?"

The Wrights piled into their trusty old car,

And headed to Grandma's - it's not very far.

Dad turned left, then quickly right,

"Which way is it, dear? It's such a dark night!"

Mrs. Wright laughed, holding the map tight,

"You turned left just then, now turn right at the light."

Tommy and Sally sang carols with cheer,

Left in the backseat, they loved this time of year.

They reached Grandma Wright's, their hearts full of glee,

But something was missing; "What could it be?"

Dad scratched his head, "Did we leave something behind?"

"The gifts, they're left at home! Oh, what a bind!"

Back to the house, they hurriedly drove,

Turning left, then right, through the traffic they wove.

Mrs. Wright chuckled, "We'll laugh at this plight,

Next year we'll make sure to get it just right."

They grabbed all the presents left by the door,

Then headed right back to Grandma's once more.

Tommy and Sally laughed all the way,

Turning left and then right, what a fun holiday!

Finally settled at Grandma Wright's place,

The family left all their worries, no, not a trace.

They laughed and they feasted, they sang through the night,

Enjoying the love that made everything right.

So remember the tale of the Wright family's quest,

Lefts and rights can sometimes be a mess,

But with family and laughter, all in sight,

Everything always turns out just right!
